TAFT IS PLEASED WITH HIS REVIEW

Compliments Colonel Scott for Appearance of Troops At the Fort.

CANNONS VOICE SALUTE

First Review President Has Witnessed Since Becoming Commander-in-Chief.

"This is the first review I have and it is the finest I have ever seen."---President Taft to Col. Scott.

The first formal event in the pro gram of President Taft's visit to Salt Lake presented a spectacle of inspiring interest that but few of the thousands gathered at Fort Douglas had witnessed before. It was the president's review, an occasion in which even the president, as commander-in-chief of the army, seldom participates.

The reception of President Taft at the military fort, and his review of the troops, was held under the most propitious conditions. The day was ideal, the filmy haze of the evening as "it spread away and lost itself in the gray hills giving added enchantment to the wide distance of the valley be-The western sky, with flecked and rolling banks of clouds, was bathed in the gold of the setting sun, and here and there the waters of the great lake were caught in the silver

From the moment the president's car sped across the reservation line, and the cannon belched out their thundering salute, the whole affair became a stage setting. For hours before the appointed time for the arrival of the president, two street car lines had been taxed to handle the crowds that flocked to the post. All afternoon the sightseers swarmed in and around the fort, scurrying over the lawns, the pathways and the parade grounds, restless in the anxiety to be sure of the best vantage point. The driveways had a constant procession of automobiles From the moment the president's car best vantage point. The driveways had a constant procession of automobiles and vehicles, and these before the beginning of the review half encircled the great area of the parade field.

After completing the regimental formation on the upper parade ground, the Fifteenth infantry was formed into line extending in double rank along the main driveway at the fort, the center of the regiment fronting the quarters of the commanding officer, Col. Walter Scott.

CROWD HELD IN CHECK.

With the eager and constantly surging crowd held back by the guards, there was then a wait of half an hour, with all eyes constantly shifting in the direction of the Utah battery, whose position in the distance and just over the brow of the hill could park be told position in the distance and just over the brow of the hill could only be told by its red guidon.

Almost as a cloud of dust was seen to rise from the roadway there was a puff of smoke and the dull boom of the first gun of 21, and a great thrill went through the expectant walters. The president had come. Sharp words of command, shuffling of feet and the clatter and snap of the strapped guns drowned the murmur that ran through drowned the murmur that ran through the crowd, "Here comes Taft," and in the same minute the president's car whirled around the bend in the drive-whirled around the bend in the drive-way. With the command, "Present arms!" 800 guns went into position as if moved by one man, and the regiment was giving its salute to the president. When the president's car reached the position of Colonel Scott and his aides, the exchange of salutes was rendered and the president alighted to great

While the regiment moved to and took up its position on the lower parade ground for the review. President Taft rested in Col. Scott's quarters.

REVIEW BEGUN.

With the start of the troops the crowd scurried to the parade ground, banking itself on the rising ground. As the regiment threw out its long line of blue, the president, with the cheers of the thousands ringing in his ears, entered the field in his automobile, and accompanied by his party and escort. As he stepped from the car and took his place at the reviewing stand the review was begun with the flourish of the field trumpets. President Taft arrived at the reviewing stand at 5.35 o'clock, and although the review moved promptly it was after 6 o'clock before the last troops had bassal and the president turned to congratulate Col. Scott upon the splendid appearance of his command.

While the regiment was leaving the field, President Taft spent several minutes in chatting with the surrounding officers and was then driven to Col. officers, and was then driven to Col. Scott's residence, where he rested until Scott's residence, where he rested until the banquet.

Unusual precautions were taken for the safety of the president during his evening at the fort. Under the direction of Lieut. Silliman, officer of the day, Col. Scott's residence during the hours that the president remained there was surrounded by a strong guard, which was increased as the darkness fell, until an almost solid line of armed soliders circled the house and grounds in addition to the soldiers secret service men and detectives secret service men and detectives moved about in the shadows of the trees, constantly on the alert and watchful for the slightest suspicious move in the lingering crowd that

Before the banquet President Taft held an informal reception at Col. Scott's quarters, meeting the officers and their wives, and greeting in his cheery way those whom he had met in the Philippines during his service as civil governor. An orchestra placed on the balcony added to the pleasant features of the early evening's meeting. Before the banquet President Taft

TOMORROW'S PROGRAM.

At 8:30 o'clock Sunday morning, President Taft will leave the Knutsford hotel for the tabernacle The line of march will be along Third South street, west one block to Main street, thence north to the tabernacle. It is urgently requested that all attending the service at the tabernacle be in their seats at 8:45, as President Taft with begin speaking at 9 o'clock.

At 10 o'clock President Taft will review the living flag and the school children at A street, between south Temple and First avenue. The route chosen to reach this spot is as follows; Along. West Temple street from the tabernacie to First South street, from there east to Twelfth East street, thence north to South Temple street, thence west to A street. The living flag will be reviewed, and then the school children, after which President Taft will be escorted to the Unitarian church, where he will attend service. From A street the party will go west to State street, south to First South street, and east to Second East street, from which point the party will move to the Unitarian church, on Second East street, between First and Second South.

After the service the president and party, accompanied by a military escort, will move along Second South to Main street, thence north to South Temple street, and west to the Oregon Short Line depot, where President Taft takes the train for Ogden.

UNIVERSITY STUDENTS.

For the purpose of review tomorrow morning the university students will assemble at the Salt Lake theater promptly at 9 o'clock, where they will group by classes, receive tickets to admit to the space within the ropes on Brigham street, form in line and proceed to Eagle Gate. Class presidents will supervise the grouping and marching of their respective classes. The students of the secondary training school will be assisted by Prof. Milton Bennion, principal of that school. All students are requested to bring pennants.

EIGHTEENTH WARD.

Eighteenth Ward—The evening will be devoted to a song service interspersed with brief remarks, including a short address on "The Influence of Music" by Bishop Orson F. Whitney, and musical reminiscences by Prof. George Careless. During the evening several of Prof. Careless' musical numbers, which have never been sung in public will be rendered by the Eighteenth ward choir. Among the selections will be the funeral hymn of President Brigham Young, last rendered on the occasion of his funeral at the Tabernacle in 1877. The soloists of the evening will be George D. Pyper who will sing "The Link Divine," with violin parts by Prof. Careless and G. Herman Schettler; Bessie Edmunds Newman, who will render with the choir "Come Near Me, My Redeemer," and Hugh W. Dougall, who will sing "The Ponitent." H. G. Whitney, director; Spencer Clawson, Jr., organist.

and fellow feeling exhibited at Fort Douglas last night at the banquet tendered the president. The key note of it all was struck by President William Howard Taft as he lifted his glass and offered this toast:
"I give you a hearty toast, gentlemen: To the officers of the United States army and their wives."

It was the first time a regiment has ever banquetted a president and the men from the fort made the occasion a great one through their efforts. The banquet was given by the officers of the Fifteenth regiment.

In his address President Taft said in part:

the last eight years it has been my good fortune to come into closs contact with the officers of the arm; contact with the officers of the army. In the Philippines, and as secretary of war, I had good opportunity to learn them, and my experiences have taught me to appreciate and value those officers most highly. I had a feeling of serving with the army in the Philippines. I can't say that the army officers acted with any too warmheartedness toward the warmheartedness toward ommission of which I was a member.
They thought that they had a big job on hand, and they didn't want civilian interference. But as time wore on, and we felt that after all we were all Americans with a common end. Americans with a common end, soldier and civilian worked amicably

SOLDIERS WORK.

"From what I know of them now. I will say that there is no task which army officers may be invited by their country to do which they are not equal country to do which they are not equal to. In peace and war they are efficient. The army officers can perform all of the functions of civil government creditably. The civil service in the Philippines when I was there was quite difficult and harassing and delicate in its execution. The men who were doing that work needed great self restraint to prevent them from breaking loose and committing deeds which might back home have been called mere cruelty, but which, under the circumstances, really would only have been perfectly natural.

But, I say, the officers showed such great self restraint under those trying conditions that their performances entitled them to be called soldiers of the army—this is whole tribbute, from me.

"I met the Fifteenth in the Cammarines." chuckled Mr. Taft, and a wide grin spread over his face, "and I remember your old colonel, who has now long passed to his reward. Colonel Mole, it was, I believe, and I shall always remember him. He was a wonderful man indeed.

At the close of the banquet three rousing cheers were given for the president. He was then escorted by the orderlies at the fort to the Knuts-ford hotel.

The excellent program of music given the banquet was the work of the afteenth infantry orchestra and Miss Laura Bean.

The big hall was artistically decorated under the direction of E. L. Wille, with green smilax. Two great American flags arched the ceiling. The Fif-can flags arched the ceiling. The Fifteenth's regimental flag, with arms embroidered on a great field of deep

Philippines, regimental swords and trophies, the bolos and other things were used to decorate the wall.
Following is the list of guests at the banquet in their order at the tables:
On the right of President Taft sat
Senator George Sutherland, Congressman Joseph Howell and Capt. Archibaid Butt, the president's aide.
On the president's left sat Col. Walter Scott, Gov. William Spry, Senator

pent-up enthusiasm of the waiting crowds was turned loose when the smilling face of the president appeared on the platform. For several minutes President Taft stood on the steps of the car, bowing and acknowledging the cheers and salutes of the people.

On each side of the street extending from the depot to Main street, crowds of people were lined up against the ropes enclosing the sidewalks. At every intersection and at every available space along the line of the drive up town, vehicles of every description, from the hig touring auto car to the most humble delivery rig, were contesting for every inch-of room. From the station to the polat where the president's car was awaiting him the street was kept clear, and affer the greetings at the station had been exchanged, the party walked up through the cordons of troops to the motor, cars, where President Taft stepped into the vehicle beside Governor Spry, and was swirled up town behind the galloping mounted orderlies who preceded the president to the fort.

Among those to greet President Taft at the station were Senator W. E. Borah of Idaho and John Hays Hammond of New York. It was "Hello, Bill," with Taft and Borah, and Hello, John" to Hammond.

The appearance of the troops stationed as escort of honor at the station was of a most pleasing nature. The Salt Lake Fligh school cadets also formed a part of the escort. cafe. The Sait Lake High school cadets also formed a part of the escort. There were 230 cadets under Capt. Webb, and music was produced for the occasion by the cadet band of 28 men.

There were fully 3,000 enthusiastic spectators packed around the Rlo Grande station and up Second South street for two blocks. "Everybody" was yelling as the presidential party marched to the automobiles and the "sweet refrain" was taken up and emphasized all along the route to Main street by the assembled crowds—all anxious to see the president. Chief Barlow was compresent in full dress uniform. There was a great rush for the Fort Douglas cars immediately after the presidential procession had passed the Kenyon corner, and the street railway people had their hands full.

The big passenger engine on the presidential train came clear through from Denver, though the crews were changed at each division terminal. It was one of the largest passenger engines that ever came in over the Rio Grande, attracting considerable attention. Engines of that size are run between Denver and Pueblo mostly. The pilot engine was also one of the large eastern machines.

The secret service men were "thicker 'n been" around the Rio Grande depot before the arrival of the presidental train. Chief Mullins of the

When the proud father of the children exclaimed "Which is which?" the big jovial president was laughing.
"I can't tell," he exclaimed. "They both look the same." The dress of the children was identical and the color of their hair would be hard to distinguish apart.

At the Knutsford President Taft was nighly pleased on receipt of a gift rom Proprietor Holmes of the Knuts-ford. Mr. Holmes happened into Mcford. Mr. Hölmes happened into Mc-Cornick & Company's bank yesterday, and saw some specimens of fruit grown in Millard county, several large apples which attracted his attention. He said he never beheld anything like them before, and he suggested to Mr. them before, and he suggested to Mr. McCornick that a case be sent to the President's room. Mr. McCornick acquiesced, and the case of apples was forwarded to the quarters of the distinguished guest. They had not been on hand more than five minutes before Mr. Holmes received a summons to the president's room. On entering he found Mr. Taft seated admiringly before the display of apples with a knife in his hand, hesitating how to properly tackle one of the monster specimens. The president asked Mr. Holmes where they were grown and said he had never in his life beheld such specimens of apple culture.
